The Community Engaged Scholars Mentoring Network is supported by Marquette University's mission and strategic plan and hosted by Marquette University’s Office of Community Engagement to provides opportunities for professional development in competencies for effective community engagement research, scholarship and teaching.

This tool assesses competencies in the following areas.
Areas of Competency:
C1. History, background, and concepts of community engagement and community-engaged scholarship (CES)

C2. Personal identity as community member: Engaging in self-reflection about one's own beliefs, stereotypes and expectations

C3. Community Engaged Scholar (CE scholar) identity as collaborator and community partner

C4. Background, history, context of the community one engages with including strengths, assets and challenges

C5. Interpersonal and communication skills

C6. Identification of topics, priorities and projects occurs in a context of collaboration and shared leadership: Topics and project generate knowledge that is applicable to community concerns in a local context and relevant to disciplinary discovery.

C7. Integration and implementation of principles of community-engaged research and scholarship occurs in seeking funding, resource management, project implementation and dissemination of knowledge

C8. Teaching – Service learning integration

C9. Teaching – Co-education (e.g. teaching with community members)

C10. Teaching – Integration of critical reflection and social justice

<td>C7. Integration and implementation of principles of community-engaged research and scholarship occurs in seeking funding, resource management, project implementation and dissemination of knowledge.</td>
<td>Researcher plans and maintains control of all aspects of the project without input from community.</td>
<td>Researcher gets funding alone and seeks community partner as site/setting for research.</td>
<td>Budget and implementation is planned collaboratively prior to grant submission.</td>
<td>Community members and researcher are collaborative partners in most aspects of the project including co-author products of dissemination.</td>
<td>From the beginning of a project, the researcher and community partner collaboratively identify strengths and challenges, seek and allocate funding, share resources, develop a mutually agreeable implementation plan and plan to disseminate outcomes in community and academic venues.</td>

<td>C9. Teaching – Co-education</td>
<td>Does not utilize community partners as co-educators in the classroom.</td>
<td>Community partners are found by the service learning program, limited if any interaction between CE scholar and partner.</td>
<td>CE scholar communicates directly with the community partner to create mutually beneficial experiences for the student and community agency.</td>
<td>Community Partner and CE scholar work together to define learning outcomes and learning activities to ensure a mutually beneficial and ethical engagement, community partner is brought into the work with the students.</td>
<td>CE scholar and Community partner work together to address a social justice concern through the active engagement of students and community partners. Both CE scholar and partner assess outcomes for both student learning and community impact. Community partner is compensated for their expertise.</td>

<tr>
<td>C10. Teaching - Integration of critical reflection and social justice</td>
<td>Experiential Learning is not valued, community-based learning is not utilized.</td>
<td>CE scholar treats service learning as a peripheral experience. Does not bring service learning into class discussions or assignments. Perhaps only has one service learning related assignment. Does not deal with the social justice aspects of service learning.</td>
<td>Clearly integrates service learning across several learning outcomes. Asks the students to consider both the social justice and academic components of the class.</td>
<td>Prepares students to build on their own cultural competency and understanding of complex social justice concepts, facilitates lessons that allow for integration between the academic content and the social justice components.</td>
<td>Leads students through critical reflection throughout the course. Guides students to apply the learning about course material and social justice in a way that transforms their prior learning.</td>
