August 1965

The Texas Medical Center

Catholic Physicians' Guilds

Follow this and additional works at: http://epublications.marquette.edu/lnq

Recommended Citation
Catholic Physicians' Guilds (1965) "The Texas Medical Center," The Linacre Quarterly: Vol. 32 : No. 3 , Article 18.
Available at: http://epublications.marquette.edu/lnq/vol32/iss3/18
"This is the first task of the teacher—to bring to light the good elements in the life and behavior of his disciples and sons, even of those less inclined to order and discipline; to have confidence in the good judgment of some, and in the patience of others; to pass over the resentments of the past, as accidents of little importance; to affirm principles and laws firmly but gently; to uproot hatred and thus pave the way for unity, not pretending that it will be reached tomorrow but consciously willing it and preparing for it."

"The Gospel . . . does not turn back, but advances with men and the times for the strength and joy of families and of peoples. He who possesses the riches of this good tradition and the freedom of God's sons, moves ahead safe and strong. Pope John told us this and gave us an example."

"By adding to the knowledge of man's biological nature, science could help the humanist to understand better the human condition, and to define the good life. Unfortunately, while biological sciences have been immensely successful in describing the elementary structures and processes of the body machine, they have tended to neglect the study of living as experience."

"It is relatively comfortable to talk about technical and social progress as long as it produces nothing worse than unemployment among commencement banquet speakers and university professors. . . . But the lack of today's graduates, Catholic or non-Christian or not, is to participate in the realities of the very things in which the Catholic conscience has been backward and provincial."

"Our agent in Bloomington, Ind., visited a local liquor emporium and spotted a bottle of wine with the brand name "Rhythm," but was unable to learn its primary and secondary purposes or how it works."

"This is the first task of the teacher—to bring to light the good elements in the life and behavior of his disciples and sons, even of those less inclined to order and discipline; to have confidence in the good judgment of some, and in the patience of others; to pass over the resentments of the past, as accidents of little importance; to affirm principles and laws firmly but gently; to uproot hatred and thus pave the way for unity, not pretending that it will be reached tomorrow but consciously willing it and preparing for it."

"The Gospel . . . does not turn back, but advances with men and the times for the strength and joy of families and of peoples. He who possesses the riches of this good tradition and the freedom of God's sons, moves ahead safe and strong. Pope John told us this and gave us an example."

"By adding to the knowledge of man's biological nature, science could help the humanist to understand better the human condition, and to define the good life. Unfortunately, while biological sciences have been immensely successful in describing the elementary structures and processes of the body machine, they have tended to neglect the study of living as experience."

"It is relatively comfortable to talk about technical and social progress as long as it produces nothing worse than unemployment among commencement banquet speakers and university professors. . . . But the lack of today's graduates, Catholic or non-Christian or not, is to participate in the realities of the very things in which the Catholic conscience has been backward and provincial."

"Our agent in Bloomington, Ind., visited a local liquor emporium and spotted a bottle of wine with the brand name "Rhythm," but was unable to learn its primary and secondary purposes or how it works."

"This is the first task of the teacher—to bring to light the good elements in the life and behavior of his disciples and sons, even of those less inclined to order and discipline; to have confidence in the good judgment of some, and in the patience of others; to pass over the resentments of the past, as accidents of little importance; to affirm principles and laws firmly but gently; to uproot hatred and thus pave the way for unity, not pretending that it will be reached tomorrow but consciously willing it and preparing for it."

"The Gospel . . . does not turn back, but advances with men and the times for the strength and joy of families and of peoples. He who possesses the riches of this good tradition and the freedom of God's sons, moves ahead safe and strong. Pope John told us this and gave us an example."

"By adding to the knowledge of man's biological nature, science could help the humanist to understand better the human condition, and to define the good life. Unfortunately, while biological sciences have been immensely successful in describing the elementary structures and processes of the body machine, they have tended to neglect the study of living as experience."

"It is relatively comfortable to talk about technical and social progress as long as it produces nothing worse than unemployment among commencement banquet speakers and university professors. . . . But the lack of today's graduates, Catholic or non-Christian or not, is to participate in the realities of the very things in which the Catholic conscience has been backward and provincial."

"Our agent in Bloomington, Ind., visited a local liquor emporium and spotted a bottle of wine with the brand name "Rhythm," but was unable to learn its primary and secondary purposes or how it works."

“...Quotes...