English usage often extends “sanctuary” to a place of safety for birds or other animals or for plants. In my younger days, Kennedy Park in our neighborhood in Chicago had a “bird haven” at 113th and Maplewood. “Haven” is a regular synonym for “sanctuary.”

In the United States, sanctuary became important in the resistance to the war in Viet Nam, where churches offered to protect men drafted from having to go into the army. Results were not great. Canada too had a sanctuary movement for U.S. draftees who did not support the war.

Recent times have seen the rise of “sanctuary cities,” cities that have declared themselves safe for migrants and refugees. Sanctuary cities were established for refugees from wars in Central America during the 1980s. And today the concept has returned to provide some protection for refugees that some government policies seek to exclude or expel.

A group of religious sisters based in Pennsylvania, the Adorers of the Blood of Christ, among their good works have been active in ecological issues. They have issued a “Land Ethic” which reads in part: “Whereas, we Adorers of the Blood of Christ believe creation is a revelation of God, we proclaim that ... As prophets, we reverence Earth as a sanctuary where all life is protected; we strive to establish justice and right relationships so that all creation might thrive.”

Sanctuary now becomes a movement for American universities. When plans for mass deportations were announced in November 2016, many students rose up in protest, particularly to protect their fellow students who might have been undocumented. And without using the term “sanctuary,” at the end of November 2016 most of the presidents of the Jesuit colleges and universities signed a statement expressing their commitment to their students who might be targeted for deportation.

The specific issues have changed through the ages, but the need for protection, for a place of safety, for refuge, for sanctuary endures.

Notes on AJCU presidents

On July 1, 2017, Dr. Mark Nemeč became the ninth president of Fairfield University, succeeding Fr. Jeffrey von Arx, S.J., who resigned last December. This brings the number of lay presidents of A.J.C.U. schools to 14, which is exactly half of the 28 Jesuit colleges and universities in the United States.

Dr. Mark Nemeč

Doctor Nemeč is the fourth new president since August 2016, when Jo Ann Rooney became president of Loyola University Chicago. In January 2017 Debra Townsley became interim president of Wheeling Jesuit University. In June 2017 Herbert Keller, S.J., became interim president of the University of Scranton. Scott Pilarz, S.J., has been named president of the University of Scranton; he will assume office on July 1, 2018.

In an address at Santa Clara University in 2000 with representatives of the 28 schools in attendance, Father General Peter-Hans Kolvenbach articulated his vision for the future of Jesuit education. This included a strong endorsement of entrusting leadership to dedicated laypersons steeped in the Jesuit spirit. The Jesuit schools
